Text A

An extract from a letter written in 1774 by a father to his daughter at boarding school

A Letter from a Father

Believe me, they are the best friends who take the trouble to shew you what you ought to do, and what you ought not to do; who plainly tell you your faults, that you may amend them

I would farther advise you not to enter into party quarrels. Where there is a number of young people together, little jealousies and disputes will arise, and offences will be given. Every body is, some how or other, drawn in to take a side; each side grows keen, and the parties, by degrees, contract particular likings and aversions to one another. This humour is carried from the boarding-school, and increased by their intercourse with the world; where it daily discovers itself by a disposition to argue, and a readiness to take part in every affair that comes to be a matter of publick discussion, and in which every one, however unfit she may be, assumes a right to judge. How often have we seen towns, cities, a great part of a country, nay the whole nation, divided about matters in which not one in ten thousand had any concern; yet all seemed to be as deeply engaged, as if their own safety or interest had been at stake! I have often wondered to see the women the keenest in such disputes; which, to me, appeared very unbecoming¹. Let a woman, when The is called to it, maintain her opinion, or diffent from others, in decent terms, and without entering into an argument so far as to alter her temper, or discompose her features. She should avoid all conversation that may deprive her of that softness and composure which are so agreeable in the fair sex, and ought to accompany all their Speeches and behaviour. A woman ruffled with passion makes a disagreeable appearance; indeed, she is not herself.

That you may be restrained from engaging in these silly contests, always ask yourself—what concern have I in this affair? If you have none, be silent; if you have any, tell your mind calmly; and, as far as they will bear it, put a favourable construction upon the actions and opinions of others.
