Section A: Theory and methods

Answer Question 1

The comparative study is a scientific approach to sociological research and is often used by positivists. Sociologists can compare data between social groups and identify differences between them, such as educational achievement.

Sociologists may compare data such as the different female literacy rates around the world (Fig. 1.1). Female literacy rates refer to the percentage of women over 15 years of age that can read and write in a country. Another example of a comparative study is the UK census. Every ten years in the UK all households have to complete a detailed survey. Many of the questions are standardised and remain the same over time. Like many sources of official statistics the UK census gathers a large amount of quantitative data taking a macro approach.

Fig. 1.1

- 1 (a) From Source A, identify the two countries with the lowest female literacy rates. [2]
- (b) Identify two methods that could be used by positivists. [2]
- (c) Using information from Source A, describe two reasons why researchers use official statistics. [4]
- (d) Describe two limitations of using case studies in sociological research. [4]
- (e) Describe two strengths and two limitations of using unstructured interviews in sociological research. [8]
- (f) Explain why objectivity is difficult to maintain when carrying out sociological research. [10]
- (g) To what extent are macro structuralist approaches the most useful for understanding society? [15]

Answer either Question 2 or Question 3

Section B: Culture, identity and socialisation

- 2 Functionalists believe for society to work well people need to agree on a common set of values, this is known as value consensus. Sanctions and socialisation are ways to ensure that members of a society share the same values. However, socialisation and sanctions differ depending on the age and gender of the individual.
- (a) What is meant by the term 'sanctions'? [2]
- (b) Describe two examples of values. [4]
- (c) Explain how traditional masculinity is changing. [6]
- (d) Explain why some sociologists argue that childhood is a social construction. [8]
- (e) To what extent does functionalism offer the best explanation of why individuals join youth sub-cultures? [15]

Section C: Social inequality

- 3 Karl Marx argued that society was divided into two main social classes: the bourgeoisie (the upper class) and the proletariat (the working class). Class stratification and status in modern industrial societies are changing and new classes have been formed, such as the underclass. Some sociologists argue there is now a growing middle class while others suggest proletarianisation is leading to a growing working class.
- (a) What is meant by the term 'underclass'? [2]
- (b) Describe two examples of ascribed status. [4]
- (c) Explain how the underclass is different from other social classes. [6]
- (d) Explain why some sociologists believe that proletarianisation has occurred in modern industrial societies. [8]
- (e) To what extent are Marxist explanations of social inequality the most useful? [15]
