Section A: Theory and methods

Answer Question 1

1 Source A

Results from a content analysis of the working roles of women on UK television

Type of Programme
Working role of female character	Comedy	Soap	Drama	Film	Total
Unemployed	2	9	5	3	19
Housewife	9	14	12	11	46
Unskilled work	2	11	4	3	20
Semi-skilled work	2	7	9	3	21
Managerial	2	4	6	7	19

Content analysis is used to research the media. This method measures the number of times a particular representation occurs. For example, a researcher may use content analysis to count the number of times women are represented in working roles on television.

This quantitative approach to analysing media content involves designing a classification grid of women's working roles on television (as Fig.1.1). The researcher then counts how many times women appear in these roles in a sample of different programmes.

To carry out content analysis it is important to work in a standardised way. This means all researchers must know exactly what to count and to make sure they are counting the same thing and recording their data in the same way.

- (a) From Source A, identify the two types of programme in which the 'Housewife' role was most common. [2]
- (b) Identify two methods, apart from content analysis, that could be used to gain quantitative data. [2]
- (c) Using information from Source A, describe two reasons why it is important for researchers to work in a standardised way. [4]
- (d) Describe two limitations of using content analysis in sociological research. [4]
- (e) Describe two strengths and two limitations of using triangulation in sociological research. [8]
- (f) Explain why some sociologists use official statistics. [10]
- (g) To what extent are focus groups the most effective research method? [15]

Answer either Question 2 or Question 3

Section B: Culture, identity and socialisation

- 2 Marshall McLuhan described the world as a global village. He argued that the world was becoming more interconnected and as a consequence we are now seeing the emergence of a global culture. This has an effect on identities, such as gender.
- (a) What is meant by the term 'global culture'? [2]
- (b) Describe two customs practised in society. [4]
- (c) Explain how globalisation brings cultures closer together. [6]
- (d) Explain why cultural diversity may be good for society. [8]
- (e) To what extent is the family the most important agency in shaping an individual's gender identity? [15]

Section C: Social inequality

- 3 It is argued that the working class seek immediate gratification, they choose instant rewards instead of planning for greater rewards in the future. Sometimes fatalism is also an attitude associated with the working class that may affect their opportunities in the work place.
- (a) What is meant by the term 'fatalism'? [2]
- (b) Describe two examples of horizontal segregation in the work place. [4]
- (c) Explain how deferred gratification may improve an individual's future opportunities. [6]
- (d) Explain why being socially excluded can be negative for an individual. [8]
- (e) To what extent does social class determine a person's life chances? [15]
